Playing Monopoly with our Money

As insurers and hospitals plan major mergers, they are playing with our hard-earned dollars and not with pretend Monopoly money. For this last post in our mini-series on consolidation, we focus on the hospital industry.

Statewide Survey Sheds Light on Wellbeing in Connecticut

A newly released survey of thousands of Connecticut residents provides current information on how people in each city and town feel about their lives, health and communities.

Is Connecticut Really the 6th Healthiest State?

Connecticut is among the top 10 healthiest states and is down two spots from last year. According to a recent report by the United Health Foundation, Connecticut is the sixth healthiest state in the country. No, you're not in a time warp—I wrote a similar blog just over a year ago—in all honesty, I remain unimpressed, yet hopeful.

Five stories that can make 2016 a big year in health care

Health care is rapidly changing, and the coming year could be a key time for many shifts that have long been in the works.

Key Quote:

“The funding that is being cut to mental health care, substance abuse treatment, and Medicaid patients is certainly money that could have and would have been spent to help some of the most vulnerable people in our state.” – Sen. Len Fasano
